Shakespeare's Table.

Bacon and salt mutton and fish always on hand in every house, salt fish, the general diet of the poorer classes. Barreled herrings from Yarmouth, (the Yarmouth "bloater"), were a luxury. The "salting tub" was as much a part of a household outfit as a washbowl.

Russian Traps for Bears.

The backwoodsman has some odd ways of hunting bears. One plan is to tie a strong chain ten feet or so long to a heavy billet of wood, and at the other end to make a running noose, says the Pittsburgh Dispatch. This loop is arranged like a simple rabbit snare, in a narrow passage, the billet being thrown on one side. When the bear runs his neck into the noose he drags after him the wooden weight, which entangles him in the bushes, and finally brings him to a full stop. The bear then follows up the billet, bites it savagely, hurls it down and continues his way. Pulled up short a second time and then a third, he goes through the same antics, until on reflection he decides to carry off the troublesome billet in his arms, and find a preceptor over which to throw it, in doing which he is dragged over by its weight. Still another snare consists in suspending a great rock or a log against a door, which closes an opening in the wall where honey is stored. When the bear comes to eat the honey he pushes away with his paw the obstacle which hinders him, but this movement only results in swinging aside the rock, which, coming back, strikes him on the head. The bear, becoming angry, makes a vigorous lunge at the weight, and, of course, receives a still more violent blow. It then comes to a grand struggle between the bear and the lifeless object, in which the latter comes out best.

Characteristics of the Antarctic Sea.

The antarctic seas are well known to whalers for their sharp gales of northwest winds, and the difficulty of navigating these ice-bearing seas is intensified by the dense fogs which so frequently obscure surrounding dangers; and the almost constant precipitation of rain and snow also tends to increase the miserable surroundings of those ill-fated mortals whose lot marks them out to battle with the elements so far from comfort and civilization. To accentuate by contrast the extreme coldness and loneliness of these dreary wastes, nature has bestowed on it a brilliant burning mountain over 12,000 feet in height, which has been named Mt. Erebus. It is situated in 78 degrees south latitude, near the supposed location of the southern pole of the southern magnetic pole. A peculiarity of the Antarctic zone is the fact that the vegetable kingdom has no representative, not even a lichen or a piece of seaweed growing on the rocks, and no land animals have been observed. The Antarctic regions are remarkable for the uniformity of their low temperature.—[N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.]

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucken's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never had a remedy that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. W. S. Lloyd, druggist.

A New Composition.

At the "World's Fair" at Chicago it has been decided that the various buildings shall be decorated with a composition known as "Staf." This is a mixture of plaster of Paris, alumina, dextrine, and glycerine, is of French origin, and was first used at the Paris Exhibition of 1878. The various constituents are mixed, like ordinary plaster, with cold water and allowed to harden in molds. The composition is quite waterproof, and to correct any tendency to brittleness the castings are backed by some textile material such as coarse canvas. The color of the material is dirty white, but it can of course be tinted to any hue that may be required.

Strayed from Clay City, Mo. the night of Nov. 1st, a white horse, 16 hands high, eight years old, light mane and tail, foretop clipped, a speck in the right eye, a natural saddle horse, and harness marks on him. The above reward will be paid for his return to G. W. LOCKMAN, 15-17 Clay City, Ky.

A woman always respects the judgment of the man who tells her that she is prettier than other women. The man who boasts that it is impossible for him to fall in love is usually a man whom no woman would ever look at twice, anyway. Look out for the man who lowers his voice when he loses his temper. He is a good deal more dangerous than the fellow who talks loud enough to be heard half way through the next century.—[Somerville Journal.]

"Well, Hooster," said the old man, "she is entitled to fifty per cent. of your devotion, anyhow. You should remember that when you go courting some other girl.—[Texas Siftings.]

Shakespeare's Table.

Bacon and salt mutton and fish always on hand in every house, salt fish, the general diet of the poorer classes. Barreled herrings from Yarmouth, (the Yarmouth "bloater"), were a luxury. The "salting tub" was as much a part of a household outfit as a washbasin.

Fresh meats were high-priced all ways. Beef and mutton were always lean in winter and fat in summer, the art of stall feeding only being invented 150 years or so later. Fresh fish was highly prized, but the streams were all owned by the rich, and so, to fish, as to poach, was a crime heavily punished. All the present wild and domestic fowl are Shakespearean.

The price of bread and beer was regulated by law. Wheat bread was the luxury, rye and barley bread the common diet. "Horse-bread" was the cheaper kind, so called because it was brought to the retailers in sacks on the backs of horses. "Manchet" was the wheat loaf weighing five ounces. "Mealine" was the penny loaf. "A quarterloaf" was the usual form. Cakes, caraway seed in rye or barley, and oatmeal cakes were always on the table.

Everything, almost, was made into pies or pasties. A "hot venison pasty" was a delicacy, but not an uncommon one. "Pippins," a dish of pippins, or "pippins and cheese" was the ordinary dessert for the better class of tables. Artichokes, marrow, (beef or mutton), were also made into pies. The weak point in the Shakespearean menu was vegetables. Of these there was little variety. Cabbage and onions were imported from Holland. From Flanders lettuce was imported, and was eaten as a course at supper. Rhubarb, called "patience," came from China in small quantities, and was only eaten at rich men's tables. Watercresses were always abundant, and were supposed to restore bloom to the complexion of women. "Flinders," carrots were brought from Flanders. Escalots (small leeks or onions), were used to rub over the plate before putting the beef or mutton upon it. The common people had only turnip leaves for greens and salads. They roasted the turnip itself in wood-ashes and ate it as a course or a side-dish.

The Elizabethan meals were dinner and supper. Breakfast was a late invention. Dinner at about noon, supper at about sundown. A knife and a napkin were all the outfit. In 1611 forks were introduced from Italy, but they were kept to be looked at as curiosities. Capers (not nasturtiums, but the bean of a long bush that grew in dead walls and rock fissures), were boiled and eaten as a salad with oil and vinegar.—[The Shakespearean.]

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis. was troubled with neuralgia and rheumatism, his stomach was disordered, his liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill. had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large fever sores on his leg; doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold at W. S. Lloyd's drug store.

Hostetter McGinnis was engaged to be married to an Austin belle, Miss Emeralda Longfellow, and for a while they used to be very affectionate. Of late he has neglected her. His father asked him why he had given her the cold shake. "Because I found out that she has only half as much probity as I thought she had," was the reply. "Well, Hostetter," said the old man, "she is entitled to fifty per cent. of your devotion, anyhow. You should remember that when you go courting some other girl.—[Texas Sift.]

Russian Traps for Bears.

The backwoodsmen have some odd ways of hunting bears. One plan is to tie a strong chain ten feet or so long to a heavy billet of wood, and at the other end to make a running noose, says the Pittsburgh Dispatch. This loop is arranged like a simple rabbit snare, in a narrow passage, the bait being thrown on one side. When the bear runs his neck into the noose he drags after him the wooden weight, which entangles him in the bushes, and finally brings him to a fall stop. The bear then follows up the billet, bites it savagely, hurls it down and continues his way. Pulled up short a second time and then a third, he goes through the same antics, until on reflection he decides to carry off the troublesome billet in his arms, and find a precipice over which to throw it, in doing which he is dragged over by its weight. Still another snare consists in suspending a great rock or a log against a door, which closes an opening in a tree where honey is stored. When the bear comes to eat the honey he pushes away with his paw the obstacle which hinders him, but this movement only results in swinging aside the rock, which, coming back, strikes him on the head. The bear, becoming angry, makes a vigorous lunge at the weight, and, to his credit, receives a still more violent blow. It then comes to a grand struggle between the bear and the lifeless object, in which the latter comes out best.

Now Try This.

It will cost you nothing and will surely do you good, if you have a cough, cold or any trouble with throat, chest or lung. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, is satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. W. S. Lloyd, druggist.

Characteristics of the Antarctic Seas.

The antarctic seas are well known to whalers for their sharp gales of northwest winds, and the difficulty of navigating these ice-bearing seas is intensified by the dense fogs which so frequently obscure surrounding dangers; and the almost constant precipitation of rain and snow also tends to increase the miserable surroundings of those ill-fated mariners whose lot marks them out to battle with the elements so far from comfort and civilization. To accentuate by contrast the extreme coldness and loneliness of these dreary wastes, nature has bestowed on it a brilliant burning magnificence over 12,000 feet in height, which has been named Mt. Erebus. It is situated in 75 degrees south latitude, near the supposed location of the southern location of the southern magnetic pole. A peculiarity of the Antarctic zone is the fact that the vegetable kingdom has no representative, not even a lichen or a piece of seaweed growing on the rocks, and no land animals have been observed. The Antarctic regions are remarkable for the uniformity of their low temperature.—[N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.]

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, is satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. W. S. Lloyd, druggist.

A New Composition.

At the "World's Fair" at Chicago it has been decided that the various buildings shall be decorated with a composition known as "Stuff." This is a mixture of plaster of Paris, alumina, dextrine, and glycerine, is of French origin, and was first used at the Paris Exhibition of 1878. The various constituents are mixed, like ordinary plaster, with cold water and allowed to harden in molds. The composition is quite waterproof, and to correct any tendency to brittleness the castings are backed by some textile material such as coarse canvas. The color of the material is dirty white, but it can of course be tinted to any hue that may be required.

There is every reason to believe, says Dr. R. W. Shufeldt, that when many more millions of years have rolled by our little earth will become cold from changes now going on, and may solidify to her very core. Life will probably be at an end long before any such condition is reached. The last one of the human species, the very tip of the last twig of the tree of human descendants, must also die. If that modified form possesses sight, its eye may look out upon a remarkable scene indeed. Earth may be stripped of all her timber; coal beds all burned up; metals all moulded into monuments; her land surface graded or quite level by causes now in operation; every other living thing, every lion, lark and louse in the land, exterminated; and nothing remaining but the works of the modified.

A Safe Investment.

Is one which is guaranteed to bring you satisfactory results, or in case of failure a return of purchase price. On this safe plan you can buy from our advertised druggist a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption. It is guaranteed to bring relief in every case, when used for any affection of the throat, lungs or chest, such as consumption, inflammation of lungs, bronchitis, asthma, whooping cough, croup, etc. It is pleasant and agreeable to taste, perfectly safe, and can always be depended upon. Trial bottles free at W. S. Lloyd's drug store.

A woman always respects the judgment of the man who tells her that she is prettier than other women. The man who boasts that it is impossible for him to fall in love is usually a man whom no woman would ever love at twice, anyway. Look out for the man who lowers his voice when he loses his temper. He is a good deal more dangerous than the fellow who talks loud enough to be heard half way through the next century.—[Somerville Journal.]

When the Democratic party surrendered the Presidency and the House of Representatives to the Republican party March 4th, 1891, there was $130,000,000 and upward cash in the Treasury available for purposes other than the ordinary expenses of the Government. To-day that sum is reduced to less than $5,000,000, and it would have been altogether extinguished had not Secretary Foster negotiated a new loan. Verily, the American people made the worst mistake in history, when they swapped Governor Cleveland for Ben. Harrison and John G. Carlisle for Tom Reed.

THE FARM AND THE FARMER.

Garden ground infested with cut worms will be benefited by plowing it deeply just before heavy freezing.

A Vermont farmer picks the apple seeds from his cider presses and sells them for use in the manufacture of prussic acid.

If window gardeners only would learn that market plant growers avoid over-potting, as they do frost, less complaints of bad luck would be heard.

Good roads increase the value of live stock, land and living generally. If a horse can do one-third more work on a good road, then his value is increased one-third.

Your gooseberry bushes will bear all the better next season for timely severe pruning. By removing branches where too thick, especially of old wood, and heading straggling branches back, you will not go far astray.

Good animals, good crops, good results all around on the farm are not the outcome of good luck. It is patient, continued, intelligent effort that brings success in agriculture, not a hit-or-miss, happy-go-lucky course.

When planting an apple orchard select land that is high, dry and open to a good circulation of air. Then the buds will not develop as soon in spring, and thus will escape the disastrous effects of late frosts. An orchard so situated and well cultivated should not have any off years, but should produce a regular succession of good crops.

In a small yard, where the flock is kept for months, every square inch is covered with droppings at some time during the occupancy of the space, and the fowls cannot pick up the smallest substance without swallowing a portion of the filth. To avoid this the yards should be scraped over with a hoe when the ground is hard, or spaded when the ground is not frozen.

Bones will soon be used so extensively for poultry that the fertilizer manufacturers will have difficulty in securing as many as formerly. Wheat and corn will be partially the food for poultry. The green bones from the butcher and the finely chopped, clover hay, scalded, will not only cheapen the cost of eggs, but will increase the number. The green bone mills are revolutionizing the method of poultry feeding.

If there is a supply of water available get it into the house and barn, if possible, before winter sets her seal upon Mother Earth. It is useless to deny the fact that the indications point to a scant supply of water before spring, and yet upon nearly every farm there is a never failing spring or stream which might be made to supply the family and stock. Look well to the water supply for the coming winter.

Part of every small horseman's education should be the names and location of the different parts of a horse's anatomy, and the ability to discover anything wrong with him; to know by his mute signs when the saddle rubs, the girth pinches, the bit is too narrow, the nose-band or the throat-latch tight, when he picks up a stone in his hoof, etc., ad libitum. They are little things in themselves, but it would be safe to wager that one half the people who ride don't know them.

No one ever hears of any prosecutions in America for having too much water in butter; of course, for the reason that there is no law against it. In England, recently, a man was fined $5 and costs with a forfeiture of his butter, for having sent to market a firkin of butter with twenty-nine pounds of water in it. The law allows nineteen per cent., and anything over that incurs a prosecution. The ordinary percentage of well-made butter is put at fifteen or sixteen.

When cold weather comes give charred corn to the confined fowls a few times a week; it is a substitute for charcoal, and the fowls like it. Take an ear of corn and put it into the fire until it is shelled. It may be shelled or left on the cob. It will produce a change for the better. Fowls gorge themselves if feed is placed before them, and unless the gizzard triturates the feed in a proper manner indigestion is sure to follow. Indigestion is the cause of much sickness we attribute to other diseases.

Eupespy.

This is what you ought to have, in fact, you must have it to enjoy life. Thousands are searching for it daily, and mourning because they find it not. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are spent annually by our people in the hope that they may attain this boon. And yet it may be had by all. We guarantee that Electric Bitters, if used according to directions and the use persisted in, will bring you good digestion and thus the demon dyspepsia and install instead Eupespy. We recommend Electric Bitters for dyspepsia and all diseases of liver, stomach and kidneys. Sold at 50 cents and $1 per bottle by W. S. Lloyd, druggist.

The Reno county, Kan., fruit growers have recently formed an association for the purpose of securing better shipping facilities and market prices. The stock is divided into 100 shares of $5 each, on which an assessment of 25 cents, is required to be paid at once. This gives to every member the right to ship in the car of the association to its agent at the pro rata carload rate for carriage and sale. Each shipper will receive his own fruit with his name and will receive in return the actual price therefor, less the expense as above. The company is now maturing shipping and packing rules. An agent will secure markets, and the committee on transportation will attend to shipments. This is an example worthy of imitation by other local societies.

Some interesting particulars regarding the ostrich are contained in a paper recently read before the Royal Society of Tasmania by Mr. James Andrew. During the nesting season, the male bird is so pugnacious that it is dangerous to go anywhere near him. His method of attack is by kicking; and as his powerful foot is armed with a formidable nail, he can do great damage by bringing it down upon his opponent. A blow with the flat of the foot is terrible enough; but the nail has a ripping action which is far worse. Instances are adduced where a man has been killed by one blow from this awful foot; and in another case a horse's back was broken by a blow aimed at its rider. When a man is attacked, it is useless to seek safety in flight, for the bird can overtake him in an instant. The only way is to lie down flat on the ground and take the punishment until chance offers an opportunity of escape. If the bird is seized by the neck and his head tightly held down, he is rendered comparatively powerless.

The well-known story of the Crimes of Tyburn is paralleled by one which is told of a hanging which took place at New London, Conn., many years ago. The murderer who was hanged was known to have had an accomplice in his crime, but no hint could be had of the identity of the other guilty party. Just before the execution took place (for it was a public one), a stranger came up hurriedly to the gallows and said to the culprit who was about to be hanged, "Good-bye, Dennis, don't blame me." By these words suspicion was directed toward the other man, and soon after he was arrested, and due time was convicted and executed for complicity in the same crime for which poor Dennis had already suffered death.—[American Notes and Queries.]

THE CHIME.

Where is an old French air,
Tong of loneliness and gloom,
To mellow, sweet, low, low compare—
And—poet all belief!

Remember he is that voice
Which—this much I opte
Made the words were some remote
From sweet, sweet of mine.

I have the dungen deep
From long lay—why he lay there
At his death, that he could not sleep
For conscience of a sin.

Two his cold hand held;
Two his limbs that shuddered in his
A pillow wet with tears.

Oh, restless little chime!
Chime—how rang he roundly
In dark hour of that unhappy time
When his heart was right away.

And ever, more and more,
A vision grew of him lost part—
With the memory, and were
In way into that time.

And there it was, for one dear sake,
The well of water that he came
His little song to make.

Of all that ever heard
In the twilight, some but I
Of the chime, as a hidden word,
The notes chime under.

From west from light and sound
And to his in this breeze had,
In the old story that he came
His little song to make.

And though 'tis mine, by right
I treasure more, and lay bare—
Sentences of sorrow and of love
The world would gladly share.

Yet must not unfold
Wherever, nor whisper tale or song,
For a little, for a little, for a little Impressed in a tune.

For when that little song Rings in my head, I know that he Is looking on forever, that he long,
Believes his life in Harper's.

SHE A WOMAN HATER

Why, yes, you may introduce me
Some time; but remember, old fellow,
I don't down here for anything but a holiday, and that implies fishing, rowing, stamping—not helping some girl over the rocks, dancing, tennis, and swimming, even with your pretty cousin.
I know I left flirtations when I left home.

Coming that delivered himself, Robert waited for his friend, Jack Manning, to assure him for the twentieth time that his cousin Lucia was a pet of common sense; not a coquette,
but a cultivated, intelligent—

—Robert?—
—Why do I care to take philosophy, poetry, or the origin of species with an intellectual Boston maid?
—You turned away to smile, while Robert said:

—I know them all. Girls can be divided into two divisions—one all for fun, the other for something else, but neither cannot go wrong.
—That's enough," interrupted Jack,
"you will have plenty of attention without demanding any of you." And the young men strolled off.

Fortunately or unfortunately, the object of these remarks was sitting behind the closed blind of a window directly behind the young men, so she could not help seeing that her cousin
and her friend had said.

Robert's sentiments were not new to her; so, instead of being annoyed, she only smiled, and her eyes shone with sisterly interest.

Jack had talked with her about Robert. When she heard they were elusive at Harvard. She knew more of him as an athlete and a society man than she knew as a scholar, though since that his honors at a German university were enough to satisfy any demands, and his first year at practicing law was most brilliant.

She knew that since his graduation at Harvard he had inherited a fortune that he had never dreamed would come, and that before this he had been deeply in love with Lucia, and that he had acknowledged; she had been aim over for a rich fellow and had always regretted it.

Lucia knew that Robert was handsome (she had seen his picture), and now she had heard his deep, low, rich voice. She also knew that he had been plotted for by many a maiden dilemma, as well as by willing daughters. This only made him withdraw more surely from society and devoted himself to his law, his book and his gun.

It was August, and he had come back a month with the old chum,
and was with various relatives, at one of the large hotels on one of the loveliest of the Maine islands.

"That night there was a hop at the hotel, and as he came in from the piazza
he met Lucia as she came down stairs with her mother and this same young man whom he had seen at dinner and who had been presented to him as Mr.
Perkins."

Lucia was radiant. Her cheeks were flushed and her eyes were shining. She was very simply dressed in white tulle
that floated around her like a cloud.
She had pink cheeks and her hair was aware of their faint perfume as she passed him.

He turned to look after her. How gracefully she walked! How charming her neck rose from her shoulders,
and how sunny was the beautiful hair!
Robert turned and walked back to the corner of the piazza that he had just left and watched the girl.

The large dining room had been cleared for the dance, and a few couples were circling over the shining floor to the music of Strauss' waltzes. The numerous bright back memories of that class day dance, when he was walking with the girl that he thought he loved,
but who, thank fortune, he was winning him back.

He saw Lucia as she floated by in young Perkins' arms. How different was her face from that other one!
Bald! His life was not to be concerned with any more pretty faces, no matter how innocent and true they looked.
His dancing days were over too. So he flung away his cigar and went to his room.

The next week was spent as he first wished, in rowing, fishing and canoe-ing. Whenever he was at the hotel he saw Lucia surrounded by admirers, but it was Perkins who seemed to be favored by her smiles. She was cordial to Robert, but never seemed to take the slightest interest in him.

One evening Robert walked to the cliff about sunset for the beautiful sea view. As he went to take a seat behind a pile of the stone, to his surprise
he found Lucia there. She started at him, and she hesitated to go to him.

"Do not let me intrude," he stammered, and started to go back.
She fastidiously that he should stay, and before he knew it they were talking together like old friends. Then they walked home by moonlight.

Robert could never forget her beauty.
She was some light, fleecy scarf about her shoulders, one end of which was carelessly caught up in her hair.
When they reached the hotel Jack met them, saying:

"I have great news for you. Perkins has returned from his cruise, and is yacht in the harbor, and starts Monday for a two weeks' cruise. He wants us to join his party. There will only be a half dozen—he, his two sisters, his brother, you, Robert and Lucia, and mother to manorize us."

"Oh, how lovely!" exclaimed Lucia.
"Of course I should like nothing better than to go with you."
—And you, Robert?" questioned Jack.
—Thank you. As your guest, I shall be pleased to go," he replied, but there was no warmth in his tone. To go with his cousin Lucia, and her mother, to monopolize Lucia. Probably they would become engaged, he thought bitterly.

He saw no more of her during the next day than before. She seemed necessary to so many people's happiness and requisite for the success of any party at the hotel. She was so kind, so unaffected, so unselfish, so happy, that her presence always brought sunshine.

It was so on board the yacht. She was the center of attraction, and many a night took her guitar and sang to them under the starlight.
The weather was unusually good,
but there came at last a two days'
storm, they had at last a break making crazy, acting careless, playing games and singing. At last, when the waves were growing more furious and the wind raging violently, some sudden impulse made Lucia look up to Robert, and say, with a smile:

"You are the best seaman here; take me down, please."
There was a general protest at this,
but she carried her point. They reached the deck and attempted to walk up and down.

"You will have to cling close," he said, drawing her hand through his arm.
The waves were like mountains, the rain beat against the wind, and the blow almost a hurricane. The color glowed in Lucia's cheeks, her eyes shone with unusual brightness.
"Oh, how sublime!" she exclaimed.
"I could live on the ocean."
"Terrible, after all," and she shuddered
a little.

back with Perkins went down, and up; then she went below to finish her packing, for this was the last day.
They were only a few hours from the harbor now.

When she appeared again she went aft and leaned against the rail, looking back over the ocean. Robert joined her there.
—Are you sorry that this is our last day? she queried.
—It has been delightful to me," he answered, then stopped, fearing to trust himself to say more.

As usual there was a call for Lucia,
and Robert had no time to ask for a wait for that evening.
His vacation was over. The next day he was to return to New York and law. He could not understand his interest in the did not call it love yet in Lucia.

She was surprised to find him so good a partner, and they waltzed and waltzed until the music stopped; then he begged her to go out on the piazza.
He drew her lace wrap about her fair shoulders and it thrilled him to see how beautiful she was.

They had hardly reached the piazza
when the orchestra began playing, and Mr. Perkins came to claim her for the dance.
Robert sat in the shadow and watched them through the window.
When the dance was over they came out and walked by him. They were talking low and earnestly, and as they stopped under the light from the door
he noticed that Lucia bent her head
to look at a ring.

He rose as they went, like one dazed.
It was nothing more than he had expected, yet it came like a great blow.
He met Lucia as she was crossing the threshold.
—I have come to finish our promise," she said, smiling.

—He felt like cursing her for her country, but there was nothing for him to do but offer his arm. This he did with much formality. After vainly trying to coax him to talk, she said:
—Now that our party is so soon to be broken up, I will tell you of an engagement that will be announced to-morrow.

"Indeed!" he said, dryly, nerving
himself for the news.
—Yes, Mr. Perkins—
—I imagine as much," he interrupted.
She looked at him in amazement.
—Do you know Marion?" she asked.
—Then he looked at her in bewilderment, and repeated inquiringly, "Marion?"

"Yes, my cousin Marion. They have been together for years, but until dis-not with the engagement to really take place until she was out of school. He goes to see her tomorrow."

"Is this Marion grown up?" he asked, then lost interest in the two and led Lucia to a settee in the shadow.
—And you are not in love with Perkins?"

A new light stole over her face. Then she broke into a hearty laugh.
—I love him as I ought to my cousin's flame," she replied. "Is it possible you thought—but she turned away her face from her own smiles.

Robert's theories and cynicism were evidently laid at sea where the yacht they left that afternoon lay anchored.
"Lucia Lucia!" he cried, clasping her in his arms. "I love you so! Tell me it is not all in vain."

One of her arms stole round his neck,
and she buried her face in his breast as she whispered:
—I think I fell in love with your picture years ago, when Jack brought it from Harvard."

"Then why did you treat me so?" he asked, then stopped, wondering.
—Because I thought you were a woman
an hater!" she replied.
—Am I?" he asked.—F. R. F. in Boston Globe.

Mr. Twob's Cautious Aversion to Jury Duty.
The death of John Twob recalls some interesting reminiscences. It is related that he could never be induced to serve on a jury. He was an intimate friend of Judge Devine. When on the bench, the Judge knew of Mr.
Twob's aversion to jury duty, and for a practical joke he caused him to be summoned as a juror at the beginning of one term.

Mr. Twob failed to make his appearance and was heavily fined; again and again he was summoned, and each time he made no response and was each time fined by Judge Devine. The total amount in fines assessed against Mr.
Twob during that term of court alone was more than $1,000, every cent of which was paid without a murmur.
He never lost an opportunity, however,
of getting even with Judge Devine, and it is said that the latter came out considerably the loser in the end.—

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE ADVOCATE.

RUNNING A PAPER UNDER DIFFICULTY

The Troubles of an Editor Who Was Controlled by a Board of Directors. A certain newspaper, over a thousand miles from Detroit was once owned and operated by a syndicate of lawyers, business men and politicians. About half of the board of directors were first wanted the fun and honor of running the paper. So whenever one of them fancied he had an idea in his head he would run up to the office and interview the managing editor.

Director No. 1's idea was that the editor and reporters were loafing most of the time, because they were not in the building every minute of the day like his own mill hands.

"Do you give your whole time to the paper?" he asked one day of the managing editor.

"Oh, no," said the editor. "I take seven or eight hours for sleep, and an hour or more for meals, a quarter of an hour for dressing in the morning, five minutes undressing at night. I don't shave, so there's five or ten minutes saved there, but I black my own boots; that takes time. Then there's the time going to and coming from the office. Sometimes I lie awake an hour or two at night thinking out some scheme for the paper. That ought to offset the time I take for meals. It seems to me, though, as if I gave all the rest of the time to the paper."

"Humph! You ought to write more for it! Three columns a day, at least."

"I saw the gas burning here as late as 12 o'clock one night. The gas bills are something frightful," said Director No. 2 when he called.

"Yes; well, you see this is a morning paper, and it gets out at daylight every night, and along until the paper goes to press the compositors—those are the men that set the types, you know—they can't read everybody's copy in the dark, and so whenever they come across a piece of copy they are not familiar with we have to light the gas for them. Probably when you came by the office that night you thought I had just struck a piece of that kind of copy."

"Oh, of course, if it's necessary, we can't object; but don't burn any more than you actually need."

Director No. 3 remarked:

"I don't altogether like what you copy from other papers. I don't think it's very interesting. Now, I've taken the Observer for many years, and there's a lot of interesting reading matter in that. When I get through with it I hadn't I better send the paper down to you and you can copy things out of it? I have kept a file of it for years, so I wouldn't like to have you cut it."

"Oh, yes, send it along. I won't cut anything out of it."

Another director came in one day and remarked:

"That's a fine article you've got on the editorial page this morning! Gets me in a nice mess! Why, the man's one of my best friends and he'll lay for me. Who wrote it?"

"Mr. Jackson."

"Well, Jackson is a fool. He's no more judgment than a sheep. We ought to get rid of him."

In order to appease Mr. Director, the editor a few days afterward had another article prepared carefully, taking back what had been said and making a veiled apology for it.

In came Director No. 5.

"You've made an awful mistake; you ought to stick to what you said last week. That was just right. It hit the nail on the head, went right to the spot. Now you've gone and taken water on it. You ought to consult Jackson about these things. His judgment on such matters is excellent."

By this time the editor began to think how his name would look at the bottom of a resignation.—Exchange.

Shopping in Cairo.

During their stay in Cairo, the late Canon Liddon and his sister, Mrs. King, occasionally went shopping, and the lady gave the following account of the oriental bartering: "De Nicola (the courier) asked the price of an article, and then offered one half; the seller protested he never altered his price; then De Nicola folded up the goods, put them on a chair, and said, 'Very well, do not waste more words. I shall give you so-and-so.' The merchant screamed, De Nicola gesticulated; then they shook hands, touched foreheads, etc., and I thought the matter was arranged, when De Nicola whispered to us, 'Now, therefore, battle is going to begin.' They screamed, stamped, thumped, and finally De Nicola threw back all our purchases, and said we would go to another shop, naming it. At once the salesman caved in, and protested he would rather give us his goods than that we should go away empty handed, and so the purchase was conducted with smiles, handshakes and the usual greetings of lip and forehead, and a backache was given us in the bargain."—London News.

Increase of Commerce.

The completion of the railroad to Tepic, Mexico, has caused much increase in the commerce at that port that the minister of finance has petitioned congress to authorize the employment of a larger force in the custom house.

A Book Three Thousand Years Old. A most extraordinary papyrus was discovered at Memphis, supposed to be more than 3,000 years old. It measured 100 feet in length. It is a "funeral roll," and is preserved in the British Museum.—St. Nicholas.

HEBER JENKINS' DISADVANTAGES.

A New England Farmer to Whom Every-thing Seemed to Have Gone Wrong.

Heber Jenkins was one of those people who are ready to prove at what they undertake is due to causes quite apart from themselves. It cannot be said that this faculty made Heber Jenkins happy, but it seemed to afford him a certain degree of satisfaction. "It does beat all," he often said, "how everything has allus gone right 't' other way 't' g'rahn with me ever sence I was born!"

"In 't' first place, there was my brother Abe's dyin'; he was the oldest, an' ef he hadn't 'a' died when he did, like 'a' I wouldn't 'a' had ter lay out time tryin' ter get eddication over 't' 't' Asheville 'academy'—whar I never hant a namable thing—jest 'cause 'twas fit 't' 't' oldest Jenkins sh'd 'a' have a taste o' books!"

Well, then, when I come home, in count my losses, was sence 't' furm was consarned, but I had ter put right to work like all possessed, heoin an grubbin' rascal, and frequent not gittin more 'a' couple of 'jacous' stiddy rest 't' in mornin' till I was 'a' kept when it come meal time; and father all the time kinder haundin of me on to work ev'ry time he see me settin' down or leasin' up anywhere. Seemed ter consider 't' was lazy if I stopped workin' ter kinder look round 't' much as a minute.

"Well, then, there was my marryin'. I was so well favored by nater that all the gals they smiled on me continous, an' finally I tuk up with 'Mandy Hobbs."

"She was a pooty gal, an' has been a good woman, an' I ain't got nothin ter say agin her, but ye see her father kep' a shoeshop, an' ther' warn't no special call fer shoes, so he didn't git very founded."

"To be sure he made some, peggins an mendin, but I warn't no hand ter peg, try 's I might; so after hitehin 'lamb's feet' 'peelers, him an me giv' up tryin' ter kerry on the trade in oot' p'ny, an' es we had a few words 'bout it I tuk 'Mandy an' soun' two little gals an come over 't' farm; an' it proved ter be 'a' ef he hadn't 'a' died when he did, ef I'd died 'stead o' him, ef I'd staid single an married 'Miry Hallet an gone inter butcherin 't' her father, or ef 'a' soun' two o' my gals had been good, likely boys, or ef I'd 'a' staid with 'Mandy's father an gone ter Headbury, like 'a' I sh'd 'a' been willin' ter set at 't' ease now an agin in my old home, ef 'a' been able ter favor my rheumatics some, that I laid 't' foundations of gouter church so stiddy, when I was lookin' toward 'Mandy!'"

"'Net laws! I ken put up with my lot, I s'pose, though 'a' some woud 'a' sunk under sence trials long ago," concluded the afflicted man, quite unconscious of the meaning of the smile on his visitor's face.—Youth's Companion.

Grass Seed Flour.

Many kinds of grass seed are used to make flour for bread and much of excellent quality. Along the rivers in Colorado and Arizona grass seeds are collected in large quantities and supply a much valued winter food for the Indians. They are ground into flour, mixed with water into a dough, and cakes of the latter are baked in the hot sand.—Washington Star.

The Fashion in Cane.

Cane varnishing is a thing of the past. The leather of the wood may be given the unglazed smoothness that careful oiling imparts, and the stick, whether black covered or not, must not be left in color.—Clothing and Furnish.

The Demand Greater Than the Supply. A dearth of jelly glasses is reported. Fruit has been so abundant and cheap that all thrifty housewives have indulged in preserve making. Now the problem is how to keep the product. The glass factories are hard at work, but find difficulty in meeting the demand for their wares.

VAGABONDS OF TIDE AND FIELD.

Astronaut Murray on the Wholesome Delights of Outdoor Life.

What a splendid foreground this is at outdoor life! How gentle and generous its rivalries! Which head shall dive deepest in the cool depths or speck the white surf farthest from shore? Which rod shall lift the heaviest trout or gun show to its credit the fullest bag of game? Whose deck shall shine the cleanest, or whose white sails shall lead the fleetest to evening's sunset? Whose table of bark shall boast of the tenderest venison or lodge front display for ornament the noblest spread of antlers? Whose rifle is truest to the camp when food is scarce, or is silent longest when game is plenty and the larder over full?

These are the generous and healthy rivalries of the outdoor life which stimulate but never fret, and leave both victor and vanquished healthy and happy still. Compare with these the scramble for wealth; the rivalries for gain, the suicidal despair of some, the vain and boastful bearing of others who lose the arrogance of those who win, the spring envyings and rankling jealousies, ripening to hatred as the years grow on, which characterize the lives men live in store, office and street, and note the contrast.

Who of us has spoken and kind hearted vagabonds of tide and field, of deck and camp, are envious of any? Each man we meet is comrade, fellow plinker, brother man, partner of ours in the sweet profits of our healthy, happy, natural life. Mild manners and light hearted wanderers, boys with smooth or wrinkled faces, gray headed some of us, but boys still, thank God, canoeists, campers, yachtsmen, our fires are lighted on a thousand shores and our evening song floats over a thousand lakes and island studded rivers. We are a family of nature's saints. Our spirits have been touched and softened by the sweet grace of nature.

We have been indoctrinated in the truths that shine out of stars and which the blue heavens declare at noon and night. The leaves of the catechism have studied have been the flowery meadows, the violaceous slopes of meadows, the shining beaches, the whispering leaves of trees, the thunder shaker of level waters. From these un-Calvinistic text books we have learned sweet lessons of God, whose gentleness we saw in the very leaves we studied. Our souls have drunk the waters of life, fresh from native fountains, and our spirits have bathed their scars in rivers which flow from him whose voice is as the sound of many waters.

All hail! Ye healthy blooded, healthy minded, kindly hearted, gentle mannered saints of flood and field, of hill and river, of ear and sail, of deck and camp; your smiling faces rise before me in 'thousands, and your voices, if in happy tune, in joke and song, come from afar and stir the silence around me into laughter. Joke, laugh and rest on, ye thrifty vagabonds and gentle sojourners; into each hour you are storing the honey of health, on which in future days of toil and strain your strength shall feed and fill itself with vigor. I hail you, fellow saints, in this lower heaven of God, where each happy one is his own priest, each pure mind its own creed, and the gentle wishes of each heart its only 'Aum and substance' of doctrine.—Forest and Stream.

Improving a Dress Suit.

"About eight years ago," said Auditor Joseph Brown, "I was in London, England. One day I bought a stall to see Patti at the Royal. A stall corresponds to our boxes. When the evening came I took the ladies around and walked in at the door. But I did not get far.

"You cannot come in here," said the doorman.

"Why not? I asked in surprise; 'here are my seat tickets.'"

"Well, you cannot enter," he replied decisively; 'your coat is a bit soiled and nothing but dress suits are allowed.'"

"Expostulated. I told him that my hotel was a long way off and that the ladies would be greatly disappointed; I was an American and did not know the rule of the theater."

"Finally he told me to go into the dressing room, where the attendants might perhaps be able to fix me out all right."

"I went, expecting to pay two or three crowns for the loan of a coat. The fellow looked at me for a second, and plucked a pin from his lapel, and pinned my coat tails back, and I found myself in evening dress!"

"I gave the man half a crown."—St. Louis Chronicle.
